THE SHOEMAKER.

HOW MACHINERY HAS SUPPLANTED THE MAN OF THE LAPSTONE.

Miseries Which the Knights of St. Crispin Inflict on Their Fellow Crestures-Facts Concevning a Revolutions ized Trade-Manufacturing Plant.

"Ali, but I have no trouble with newshoes," explains the self complacent egotist, who alwnys has a patent for everything. "I only wear them it few hours each duy, and sometimes take a whole month to break in a new

But why does he only wear them n few hours each day? And why does he need a month to make his feet comfortable! Samply because if a man is in any respecta tenderfoot, he must always keep his new shoes from one week to thirty days on probation before he will be quite certain that he will not have to throw them away or give them to the poor. Sometimes they revive a latent corn which the old shoes in their turn had brought to life, and then permitted to lie mactive for a few months. Somet mes the leather proves to be too hard and inflexible, and binds the foot like a vise until the bones ache and the muscles become benumbed. There are men who can lardly pass a shoe store without a pang, and whose keenest sense of human misery is derived from their experience with

It may be held that the shoemakers are not altogether to blame for the miseries which they inther on their fellow creatures. Not ficial means to make their figures look like out satisfying tre public hour glasses. But the corset makers were not the parties to be field responsible. The fault was to be charged to a perverted artistic sense, to a conviction that an immaturally small walst added to the fenriuline power of fascination, It did nothing of the sort. It only made the female figure look richenlens, and such also is the effect of many of the fashions which obtain in shees on the shape of the feet. But no matter. If the shoe itself, without any reference to the purpose for complete than the revolution which has taken place in shoemaking during the last twentyfive years. The cubbler we shall have always with us; but the shoemaker has almost completely changed his form. It is to be fenred, too, that he is no louger entitled to claim the protection of his tutelar St. Crispin, for he has become the servant of a witch. Aml such a witch! Driven to its highest capacity a single McKay machine has been known to chip the soles upon 1,200 pairs of new shoes within ten hours, and it takes 300 hands. working in great part with yet other lugenious labor saving machines, to feed one of these beattable stitchers, and clear away the tables after it has thushed. It will be seen, therefore, that the McKay machine is not only a witch itself, but that it is a boss witch. In the lost provided she pathe side stitching, beeling and even the lasting are done by subsidiary muchanes, and so also would be the cutting, were it not for the imperfections of the leather, which demand the services of a practiced sye in selecting the parts that are fit for use Yet the work is done with so little effort that a motor of single horse power would drive a half dozen or more of the Mc-Kay machines at one and the same time.

Baldes, North American Indians, and statues have toes, but civilized men and women have them no more. They have only a compressed mass of bone, muscles, and corns where toes ought to be permitted to grow and expand. But were the fashionable offer a covering for the foot that would permit a natural growth, be would find no custoniers. According to the modern conception of what is shapely, nature made a mistake when she fashiousl a foot broader at the toes than at the instep. But the modern idea of a gretty foot is about as nearly correct as the recently modern idea of a pretty waist; and were suces modeled after the exact natural der how we ever tolcrated any other model.

No industrial revolution was ever more

After this statement of the enpacty it will nip.

Will you kindly tell me," said Fred, thrushall not "Will you kindly tell me," said Fred, thrushall be seen that it is only fair metuphor and not hyperbole to call the machine a witch. It is enrinently proper, too, that the chief seats of Its netivity should be found at Lynn and Hnverhill, cities in the same state with witch killing Salem, and not so distant as to be aucongenital in their origin. But the city of Lynn, notwithstanding its reputation, is not so much a monopolist at sheenmking as some persons suppose. New York claims everything, and withla her wilderness of brick and mortar the is continually evolving phenomera that are a surprise to even her own mizens. Who would believe that within a mile and a half of the city hall, mainly, indeed, within a quarter of a mile of that place, there are almost as many firms of shoe manufacturers as are to be found in either of the cities of Lynn or Haverbill? The statement would not be believed were it not possible to furnish the figures. But it is quite ossible. There are 186 thrms in Lynn, 178 in Haverbill, and 172 in New York.

But Lynn will boast of the size of her factories, and point to the annual value of her new slices as evidence of her general superiority. It is certain that she has some pretty large factories, and can point to one firm that turns out 10,000 pairs of shoes each day. But there is a firm in New York that produces shoes to the value of about $1,000,000 amually, and there are others that run well upamong the hundreds of thousands. Listimates differ on the comparative value of the products of the two cities, but he this respect we must concede to Lynn a long lend over the metropolis. Judging from the report of goods shipped through Boston between the first of last January and the last of August, and glvtug to Lynn her probable preportion of the total, her annual product cannot amount to much less than $25,000,000, while the annual product of New York is not estimated at more thair $10,000,000. It has been said that the capacity of the shoe manufacturing plant in the United States is equal in three months to the market demands of one entire year. This may be true so far no the shoeinaking muchines are concerned, but it is evidently not true when the question of skilled workmen for feeding and operating the machines is involved. Say that the manufacturers in this city make 4,000,000 pairs of shoes each year. That would be about the proper estimate on a valuation of $10,000,000. But there are 1,500,000 pairs of feet in New York city whose, and they would manage to get through with pretty nearly 4,000,000 pairs of shoes in one year, even were there no demand from abroa 1.—New York Sun.

Englishman Versus American.

In coming from England to New York one finds a keener, paler face among the men of this city, a better finished outline, too. Whether the roun led cheek and well turned jaw is due to early gum chewing, or to ancestral mastication of mything else, it is hard to say, but the fact remains. It may, indeed, be due to a premature acquaintance with a good beefsteak. The writer has always funcied that an early diet of oatmeal spoils the development of the Scottish contour, just as potatoes rulned the Irish jaw. It is probable that the dryness of the climate here is mainly responsible for the paler complexion, assisted by the absence of heady initional beverages.

The American is much more adaptable than the Englishman in any new field. The Briton is a man of one profession or trade, untside of which he is absolutely helpless. He is still further landicapped by a feeling of doubtful pride which binders him from acrepting a lower position than that he had been accustomed to.

In coming to America and failing to find what he wants, he is very not to fall into the most desperate straits before he realizes the fact that all honest labor is honorable in hold fast to that which is good and in accord America, and that society is not subdivided with common sense,-Charles F. ### Softish Pavents to Ittome.

A protation or two ago plain American fathers and mothers did not entertain the Inneifal idea that the state should talo clarge of everybody's education, morals and habits. They believed that it was their duty to keep an eye on their boys, and in cases of misbehavior they resorted without compane tion to a lough luckory or a barrel stave. Thirty or forty years ago, if a Georgia father bud been told that his stateen year-old boy was in danger of having a congested bralu from the smoking of elgarettes, he would have rushed the youngster out into the back yard and sailed into lim with a slick. In three days people dish't appeul to societies or a Women's Christian Temperance Union or the legislature when their boys went wrong. They simply made a family affair of It and straightened it out satisfactorily. The other day we said that there could be no great improvement in morals mull we restored the thorough and efficient system of family education and government which formerly prevailed. What we said applies directly to this eigarette evil. If boys are to be alluwed to be their own masters, choose their companious and dispose of their time,
